Communications from the Board of Commissioners

2. Local Internet Access

Commissioner Nina Jonas and the Community Library's IT manager attended a broadband summit in Idaho Falls. Most attendees were government agencies and private Idaho companies invested in fiber and broadband. Topics included funding, federal grants, and The Recovery Act. Ketchum's future involvement would likely be to stimulate competition among private companies.

Local providers are eager to participate in a broadband strategic plan; and have provided maps of their underground infrastructures. The gaps can be connected with conduit to create loops all over town. CenturyLink already has phone line end feeds into residences and buildings. The anchor institutes—schools, the library, the hospital, the city—are ready to move forward.

3. Special Projects Committee discussion

Chairman Mark Eshman said he would like to have a better understanding of tax credit deals. He'd like to form a Special Projects Committee with expertise in real estate, housing, land swaps, etc. that would be available to interested companies or ideas. If necessary, the Committee can be confidential in candidly addressing out-of-the-box ideas and proprietary issues. The Committee can research and examine an idea and identify potential challenges. The Committee could comprise URA Board members, ad hoc members and a Councilmember; or could be variable with a project-specific skillset. Eshman and Marks will meet to craft a plan for the committee.

URA Visioning Session

Chairman Mark Eshman suggested the Visioning Session be postponed since this was Election Week and public outreach didn't get much visibility. Commissioners tentatively scheduled a noon meeting December 3-4-5. Public and businesses will be invited to actively participate in guiding the URA's future goals and projects.
